Roger Williams is co-founder and President of the Emergent Leadership Institute; a non-profit designed to engage high school and college students in volunteerism around Indianapolis. Since its launch in August of 2005, ELI has placed over 8000 students in meaningful service around Indianapolis. During his eighteen years of work in the youth development field, Roger has acquired a strong passion for the leadership formation of young people through social media tools. Having spoken to groups ranging from 10 to 1200 in size, Roger is excited about sharing how non-profit leaders can leverage social media to impact their community.

Ken has more than 25 years experience in volunteer and nonprofit administration, volunteer development and service activities and leadership development. His research interests include volunteer recruitment, motivation, recognition and retention; trends in volunteerism, volunteer competencies, volunteer program effectiveness and leadership development. He also works as a private consultant and trainer in volunteerism for non-profit organizations and is a keynote speaker. Ken blends humor and raw emotion into recounting true stories and personal experiences to create a unique and powerful experience for his audience.
